Recent Eruption of Vesuvius and Its Result.

HAD BEEN GOOD FOR YEARS

The Most Disastrous Outbreak Known of Record.

KRAKATAU'S RAMPAGE IN 1883

Was Heard 3,000 Miles and Its Effect Encircled the Globe, but No One Was Killed.

When one considers the number of volcanoes there are in the world and the destruction they cause when eruptions occur, the earth seems to be a fearsome, dangerous place to live in. The worst of it is, too. there is no other place to live.

When one traces the volcano belt it seems to girdle the world about the equator. That is, the most of the famous volcanoes are scattered in the tropic belt. But, as a matter of fact, there is a line of them reaching up the backbone of each hemisphere. The Andes are full of them. There is a ine extending through the Rockies; the peninsula end of Alaska is like a scorpion's tail, tipped with fire, and volcanoes are sprinkled through the length of Africa, in Central Europe and Asia, and in the East and West Indies.

It may be a good thing in a way that the earth has so many safety valves. They may a good many times. But it is seldom that a damage. It depreciates the price of real estate in its immediate vicinity, however, and makes the local population wonder why they insisted on sitting on the lid after the steam gauge had shown a dangerous degree of pressure.

Noticeable Around the World. The only time in recorded history that a volcans ever went on such a wild rampage as to make itself noticeable all over the world was the great outbreak of Krakatau in 1883. The noise of explosions from this eruption was heard at a distance of 3,000 miles. The disturbance affected the tides almost over the whole world. The volcanic dust that was thrown aloft was carried in a belt clear around the world, and it did not clear out of the earth's atmosphere for not clear out of the earth's atmosphere for three years. Curiously enough, the eruption of Krakatau did no damage, as the island where it stands is uninhabited, and though it was blown up and the whole face of the ocean in that region was changed, there was nobody hurt. But the resulting tidal waves wiped out 165 villages and caused a loss of 36,000 lives.

The worst of a volcano is that once a volcano it is never safe to trust it as extinct. Like Fuzzy Wuzzy, "E's all 'ot sand an' ginger when alive and 'e's generally shammin' when 'e's dead." That was the way with Vesuvius, which has been one of the most reliably active volcanoes through most of the Christian era. Vesuvius was supposed to be good and dead when Spartisupposed to be good and dead when Sparti-cus and his band of gladiators took refuge in its crater and made the Roman legion-aries look like a bunch of Russian reservists Vesuvius was then overgrown inside and with a forest of hundred-year-old trees, and looked about as harmless as a cat sleeping on a hearth rug. But in the year of our Lord 70 she awoke with a jump and wiped out Pompeli and Herculaneum, kill-ing Pliny, the elder, whose insatiable curi-osity prompted him to go across the bay to learn what was going on. How many others perished in that eruption has never been definitely ascertained, but the population of two cities was practically wiped out, and the land outside of Naples was a desert waste for a century and believed to be accursed by the gods.

The People Forget.

Then people began to grow careless, and again they took liberties with the old sieeping monster. Pompeli and Herculaneum were forgotten and new villages and vineyards were planted on the slopes of the mountain and corner lots were staked out around the base. But Vesuvius was only waiting its chance, and at intervals it waked up and licked its chops, spilling lava over the vineyards and generally making the region undesirable as a residence section. The last real serious outbreak was in 1872, when the mountain did just about what it has done in the past fortnight killed about 5,000 people and rendered the surrounding land unfit for cultivation for seven or eight years thereafter. Dispatches say it will be almost a decade before the ground around the mountain is fit to plant potatoes in, let alone grape vines.

A much more moderately conducted volcano is a close neighbor of Vesuvius, Stromboli, known to mariners as "the lighthouse of the Mediterranean." It is on an island about sixteen miles off the Straits of Messina. While it does not cause the commotion which vesuvius does, it is overhung almost all the time with a cloud of vapor against which the internal fires of the mountain show red at night, a natural heable for miles around. West Indies a Danger Zone.

On this hemisphere the West Indies have always been regarded as the danger zone, as far as volcanoes are concerned, and Mt. Pelee on Martinique had once almost wiped out the town of St. Pierre prior to the awful eruption of 1902. St. Pierre was at the same time a mile closer to Pelee than was Pompeli to Vesuvius, and the mountain, like all volcanoes, though it had lain dormant for a long time, was as unreliable as any of the other vent holes of the earth. But familiarity breeds contempt with vol-canoes, as with anything else. Pelee had given warning that there was trouble com-ing about three months before the final catastrophe. The people took no notice, however, and there was an excursion to the mountain advertised weeks in advance to take place May 10, which proved to be two days after the fatal eruption.

In fact up to the moment that the awful cloud of fire swept out of the volcano May 8, the cable ship Grappler was fishing for a broken cable off the town and was sending testing messages over the line. The cable operator at the city end of the wire had just said "ready" when the burning cloud swept out of the mountain. Three minutes afterward there was not a vestige of St. Pierre left except smoking brick walls. It was a city of the dead, a population of 30,000 wiped out in an instant. Yet St. Pierre is being gradually rebuilt, and there will be a thriving town there waiting for the next outbreak of Pelee.

Krakatau was the prime spectacular per-formance of the world, so far as there is formance of the world, so far as there is any record. For months prior to the outbreak there was every evidence that the mountain was getting ready to do business on an extensive scale. The little island where it is located is directly between Java and Sumatra and, as has been said, was fortunately uninhabited. As early as May of 1883 the mountain commenced to smoke, and there was an eruption that the visiting ship captains thought was on a tolerably extensive scale. It wiped out all the vegetation on the island and blew away part of the crater.

What Happened in August. But that was merely the tuning up for the overture. The mountain rumbled and grumbled till August 27 of the same year, and then just what happened no one ever knew, for there was no one there to see.

the northwest to make the new Island. There was a rush of receding and advancing tides as though the sea had been sucked in to fill the gap and then had been driven back by the splash of the falling mass of rock and earth. The water rose fifty feet in places over the surrounding lands and rock and earth. The water rose fifty feet in places over the surrounding lands and there were 165 villages entirely and 132 partially destroyed.

The farthest point at which the explosion was heard was a little short of 3,000 miles away, just about as far as from Charleston, S. C., to Los Angeles. Warships stationed around British India hastily put to sea to learn what the firing was about, for it sounded as though a great sea battle were going on. Measurements were attempted of the height of the volcanic dust cloud. They ran from seventeen to twenty-three miles and were mere estimates. The circle of atmospheric disturbance swept three and a half times around the world, making the mercury in all the barometers jump up and down a tenth of an inch at a jump, and for two or three years thereafter there was a succession of gorgeous sunsets and sunrises. succession of gorgeous sunsets and sunrises in all parts of the world due to the yet un-settled clouds of volcanic dust.

No Serious Eruptions Here.

This country has never been treated to a eally serious volcanic disturbance, but there are in this hemisphere between Terra del Fuego and the Aleutian Isles ninetyeight active or recently extinct volcanoes. But, as stated, no one can determine when a volcano is really extinct. Mount Ranier, up in Washington, has just been giving an exhibition as though it felt slighted at the attention the world was directing toward Vesuvius. All along the Alaskan coast like and especially down the chain of islands that run off from the Alaskan peninsula there are a sore of active or recently extinct volcanoes, and one of the recently returned field workers of the coast and geodetic survey reports find-ing in southern Alaska along the course of the Umak river a volcano that had sent down a great lava flow and burned off all the ancient forest in its path certainly within the past fifty years. But no one ever heard of ft before in the United States. Mounts Hood, Shasta, Ranier, San Francisco mountain, the Spanish peaks and a score of others scattered through the Rockles are all volcanoes and are liable to wake up and do business any day in the week.

Twenty-One in Philippines. When the United States took the Philippines for $20,000,000 the government not only bought a well-regulated revolution but have saved the old globe from blowing up got twenty-one full-grown volcanoes thrown in without extra charge. Mount Taal, in volcanic outbreak does more than local Cavite province, threw down the Manila Cathedral as late as 1863, and records of her activities extend back to 1709. Mayon, also on the island of Luzon, is another of the most noted volcanoes in the archipelago, but nearly every one of the larger islands had a volcano of some sort, and there are recent records of seven outbreaks

m Mindanao. Hawaii is not behind in the matter of volcanoes, and Mono Saua is 14,000 feet high, one of the most imposing volcanic peaks in the world. It is an outgrowth from the floor of the ocean, and if the water could be drained away would stand a good 30,000 feet high FISHERMEN ARE BUSY. Elaborate Preparations Made for Sport by Anglers.

Thousands of persons who had planned o go fishing today were busy yesterday with preparations for their trips. They watched the weather bureau reports as closely as did the ladies who had purchased new hats or dresses. Nothing short of a heavy downfall of rain will keep the enthusiastic disciples of Walton from the river and Eastern Branch today. Many river and Eastern Branch today. Many newly made gardens were dug up by an-glers yesterday and many plants ruined, but the question of destroying a few plants was a matter of minor consideration com-pared with the supposed necessity for get-ting worms for use as half.

pared with the supposed necessity for getting worms for use as bait.

Soft crabs, it is said, make the finest bait for the large white perch, but every angler is not able to pay the high prices that are charged for them. The prices range from 75 cents to $2.50 a dozen, and twelve of the "spiders" furnish only a small quantity of bait. Despite the prices charged for them the demand was great and fishermen.

bait. Despite the prices charged for them the demand was great, and fishermen bought nearly all the stock the dealers had on hand. The good luck experienced by some fishermen last week caused others to believe that they could catch some good strings of fish today. Live bait is plentiful and much cheaper than crabs.

Boatmen along the river and branch received many advance orders for boats, and, it is believed, there will be scarcely a boat to be hired by 9 o'clock should the weather be anything like fit for the anglers to make an early start. Experts who have spent considerable time on the river during recent days suggest that it would be well for the rod and line anglers to take along some fresh herring for bait, many Mississippi catfish having been caught recently with herring bait.

EASTER MARKET.

Yesterday Was a Busy Occasion for the Dealers.

Although market dealers declared they had had a good Easter trade, there seemed to be supplies upon the benches last night for another Easter opening. Many of those who visited the Center market yesterday were merciy sightseers, and they were so time, was given a hearing Friday afternoon the dealers were willing to dispose of their testimony given by J. F. Jenkins of Camremaining stock at greatly reduced prices. The flowers had been picked over, however, as were those sold during the morning hours. The meat supply showed the effects of the day's trade, and was to be had at almost any price. The prices charged depended wholly upon the quality, some of the dealers sacrificing their stock rather than keep it over until Monday. Outside the market there were dealers who had large stocks of meat, and they were shouting the prices for the benefit of those who usually do their shopping Saturday nights. most any price. The prices charged de-"Who will have this nice beef at 4 cents a pound?" several of them shouted.

Thousands of pounds of beef were sold at the price mentioned, and as much more was sold at prices ranging from that to 15 cents a pound. Pork and sheet meat was sold at correspondingly cheap prices, and the crowds who patronized the street merchants remained about the market until long after the regular closing hour of the building. Included among the late shoppers were many belated countrymen and others. It was nearly midnight when the last light was extinguished and when the night watchmen appeared.

Doctors Say Drink Beer

With Your Meals It Will Aid Digestion as Well as Give

You an Appetite.

Doctors find pure beer one of the most reliable tonics. On account of its high nourishing qualities when made from eight-day mult and choicest hops, as Pabst Beer is, it is prescribed as a superior adjunct to the diet of the convalèscent.

Pure, well-aged beer is a tonic, an appetizer, an aid to digestion, and a food that is strengthening and nourishing. Solid foods are injurious if partaken of too freely, because solids remain in the stomach a long time and retard digestion. Nourishing liquids, such as milk, soups or good beer, quickly pass from the stomach (physiologists say in about 45 minutes). Milk is 88 per cent water and 12 per cent nourishment. Pabet Beer is 88 per cent sterilized water and 12 per cent nourishment. That is good beer, the richest, cleanest, purest beer known. Pabst Beer is superior because it is manufac tured by the exclusive Pabst method of brewingwith eight-day malt and choicest hops, the result of 60 years' successful scientific and practical re-
